

LA BASTILLE

How to Place a Commercial Order

1. Using the chart provided, determine the size of your space and how many you would like to seat.
2. Choose from a variety of table sizes to fit your space and seating requirements.
3. Choose a table base (See Base Tear sheet for specs)
4. Place your order

Square & Rectangular Tables

- Each person should have about 2' of the table perimeter (calculated by doubling the sum of the width and depth)
- Tables should be 60" apart, allowing for 24" of aisle or service space in smaller spaces, when tables are placed diagonally, corners should be 24" apart and many allow more tables depending on your room layout and dimensions
- Square tables tend to be more flexible and easier to move and rear range, while many restaurants use varying sizes of rectangular tables to create aesthetically appealing spaces that can also seat many varying party sizes

Round Tables

- Each person should have about 2' of the table circumference (calculated by the mathematical statistic of Pi or about 3.14)
- Tables should be 54" apart, allowing for 24" of aisle or service space

Considerations to Remember

- Take note of the general rules of thumb for round and rectangle/ square tables (allow approximately 24" aisle space and give each person about 24" of the table's perimeter)
- Consider each function and plan spacing accordingly (e.g., will it be an hors d'oeuvres and cocktail party or a full five-course dinner where)
- Servers will need extra room delivering plated meals, or is it an event where games or other table top activities will be taking place?)
- Consider attire as part of the function (e.g., females will be wearing large poufy dresses) and give enough space accordingly
